BEXLEY INDEPENDENT TRAVEL SCHEME

Bexley Independent Travel Scheme

Everyone should have the opportunity to use public transport. Knowing how to travel safely, effectively and independently, by public transport or other means is an essential requirement of life. This is often taken for granted by the majority of the travelling public.

It is easy to forget that at some stage in our lives we have all received travel-training support, whether informally from parent, guardians and family members or formal road safety training by teachers or local road safety officers.

However, there are many individuals such as school children, children with special educational needs or older people and those with disabilities or learning difficulties who might require support, assistance, mentoring and training in order to use public transport safely.

Travel training provides the skills and confidence to enable those who need additional help, to make journeys independently and safely using public transport. Travel training encompasses a wide range of support and assistance techniques for those who require it.

Bexley Accessible Transport Scheme working in partnership with London Borough Bexley have created and developed BITS to provide this unique service. If you are looking for ways to enhance life skills for people who require a little extra support or to reduce costs for transport services, BITS can offer a bespoke training solution ranging from capability and risk assessment to tailored, start-to-finish programmes for individuals, organisations and groups.
